To Whom It May Concern,

Local artist Larry Eifert, who has worked in many locations throughout the United States including Olympic National Park, demonstrates a vast knowledge of natural history, which he skillfully transfers to artistic canvases. Over the past several years, Larry has painted a number of full-color pieces for Olympic National Park visitor center and wayside exhibit projects. These paintings include two large murals for a travelling exhibit, with intricate renditions of plants, animals, and large physical features of a major park valley. He also painted natural history scenes for two wayside exhibit projects, which included scenic renditions of rivers and forest, an orientation map, and close-ups of plants, animals, people and structures.

Larry's talents are best showcased by his artwork, which is competitively priced, realistic and colorful. He stays on budget and on schedule and is fully dedicated to his projects. Larry is always willing to work closely with staff to ensure the accuracy of his depictions. He works well independently but also welcomes this input which, as he says, improves his product and produces the best outcome.
